Following his realization of the transformative effects of creative engagement with his own inner figures and evolving method of active imagination (as revealed in his famous Red Book), Jung encouraged his patients and fellow analysts to engage in similar processes of dialogue and creative expression of their dreams, visions and fantasies. In the late 1950's Jolande Jacobi began collecting the pictures that accumulated from such practices. Jung subsequently donated his own collection of some 4500 patient works to the Institute, and the pictures archive was established. A valuable educational and research resource for analysts and students of analytical psychology as well as interested public, the archive now holds over 10,000 images, plus photographs and other historical documents. The study of these case materials reveals the mysterious and transformative power of active encounter and struggle with the unconscious.

For the 2025 IAAP conference theme on experiences of the non-understandable: Jungian explorations and contributions, we invite you to experience this original material firsthand. In conjunction with a conference presentation we will exhibit a series of original paintings and images from the archive which exemplify these transformative processes.

Join us at the Institute during the conference and let your imagination be inspired! The exhibition will be open daily, with a café for refreshments on the ground floor. A Vernissage will take place Wednesday evening, and the bookshop/library will be open daily, as well.

Vernissage: Wednesday, August 27, 19:00
